Dry Bones

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING

Native Logic

An official was explaining daylight savings time to an old Native Chief who held up his hand stopping him.

"Only the government would believe you could cut a foot off the top of a blanket, sew it to the bottom, and end up with a longer blanket."

Investor Relations

We are still dealing with potential investors. There's no new news but we will keep everyone informed. The best way to stay in the loop is to attend meetings.

If you think it might be too cold out, please consider our ancestors who were forced to endure the frigid temperatures, with poor threadbare clothes.—

Taoyateduta's Mother, Leaf Dweller

We've heard many stories of the life, tribulations and deeds of the mighty Sioux chief Taoyateduta, or "His Red People". White people mistranslated his name to be "Little Crow" and that is the name most people know him as today.

But what of his mother?

Little Crow's mother, Leaf Dweller was the daughter of a mighty Sioux chief. She was celebrated for her beauty, spirit and intelligence.

She raised her son to be a mighty warrior and a wise chief. She wanted Little Crow to grow strong and healthy so, according to legend, would plunge him into the frigid lake through a hole in the ice and then rub him with snow to strengthen his nerves.

She would also remain with him in the deep woods for days at a time, so that he might know that understand solitude and not be afraid of nature.

"My son," she would say, "if you are to be a leader of men, you must listen in silence to the mystery and to the spirit." (tiny.cc/leafdweller)

Minnesota State Capital Building Art May Not Reflect True Native History

Gov. Mark Dayton may consider rethinking some of the paintings and Civil War murals which adorn the walls of the Governor's Reception Room at the State Capitol.

Some of the art portrays early meetings between Native Americans and explorers and settlers. These paintings reflect a problematic mythology around Minnesota's creation story and they deserve discussion.

The most prominent painting, "Treaty of Traverse des Sioux," hangs behind the governor's podium.

Signed in 1851, the treaty in question secured a third of the land for the future state of Minnesota. The painting depicts what seems to be a fair and formal negotiation between two sovereign nations. Lying on a table, the treaty document appears to radiate light, like a holy object in religious paintings.

On November 7, 1862, a group of about 1,700 Dakota, primarily women and children, were forcibly marched from the Lower Sioux Agency to a concentration camp at Fort Snelling.

Did You Know?

Only Sioux Chiefs wore war bonnets however each tribe could have many Chiefs. There were was a War Chief, Civil Chief, and a Medicine Man who was also considered a Chief.

The Sioux tribe was a Confederation of many sub-tribes and each sub-tribe was politically sovereign although they tended to work together in times of need which benefited them greatly in battles against other tribes.

When Euro-Americans and natives met, they used ancient diplomatic protocols that included formal language, ceremonial gifts, and displays of military power. But behind these symbols and rituals there were often very different ways of understanding power and authority. Such differences sometimes made communication across the cultural divide difficult and open to confusion and misunderstanding. Each tried to reshape the other in their own image. The white man sought to impose their own notions of hierarchy onto Indians by “making chiefs” with medals, printed certificates, and gifts. Native people tried to impose the obligations of kinship on the visitors by means of adoption ceremonies, shared names, and ritual gifts.

Tribal ID cards

The tribe is trying to decide if we should outsource the job of creating our ID cards or do it “in house”. Here are the options:

We can purchase an ID card printer which prints both sides of hard plastic in full color. It will cost around $800 for this printer. If 100 people purchase cards at $10 each the tribe will have recovered the cost. Then each card purchased can go towards the ink, blank cards, office supplies, savings, etc.

OR

The tribe can send our members information to a third party who can print our IDs in full color on hard plastic (like a credit card) and then send them back to us. This company will charge $10 per card and the tribe will earn nothing but no up-front costs needed.

Please come to the meetings to discuss and vote.

Native American Tours and Tourism

Friends of St Paul Library (thefriends.org) have invited our tribe to play a part in an exciting upcoming venture spotlighting important, local, Native American sites. A barge is being donated to them which will allow river tours of our important landmarks.

We'll have more info soon.
